Why Study in Germany?

Bordering with 9 other European cities, Germany is the ideal location for foreign students. This is, in part, due to how easy it is to explore Europe from Germany. In 2014, it was reported by the OECD that Germany was the world's third leading destination for international study.

Germany's higher education institutions are split into three main types; Universität (university), Fachhochschule (university of applied sciences) and Kunsthochschulen, Musikhochschulen, or Filmschulen (colleges of art, music, or film). Thousands of programmes are offered, meaning there will be a course for everyone. Whilst many of the institution types offer similar courses, their focuses are slightly different. Universitäts generally focus on research driven programme, whereas Fachhochschule offer more practical approach to subjects.
